3 burning questions for eyebrow pro Ramy Gafni

Q&A

“Is there a way to tweeze my brows to make my eyes really pop?”

—Brittany

Yes! You want your brows to be full and long enough that they frame your eyes. That said, when the tail of your eyebrow grows too long, it can make you look sad and tired. And when your brows are overgrown at the arch, your eyelids look droopy. If that's happening to you, tweeze or trim the very end of the brow and remove a few hairs below the brow at the arch. Then swipe a highlighter along the underside of the brow to reflect light. This will make you appear instantly refreshed.

“One of my eyebrows is a rebel. How can I get both to match?”

—Lori

Each of your brow bones is a built-in guide to its eyebrow's ideal shape. Don't obsess over making your brows completely symmetrical—no one's are. I've seen people shave off half an eyebrow and try to draw it back on to perfectly match the other. That's the worst, most artificial-looking thing you could do. Instead, remove the hairs in no-man's land—anything way above or below the rest of your brow hairs—then follow the curve of your brow bone as you tweeze for a natural-looking result.

OUR GURU'S GO-TOS

THE RIGHT TOOL

Tweezerman Stainless Steel Slant tweezers ($29.95, www.datelinecity.com). It's the industry standard and still the best.

A QUICK GROOMER

Givenchy Mister Eyebrow Fixing Pencil ($39, Sephora). While you're letting your brows grow, swipe this clear pencil through them to hold hairs in place and create the illusion of a smooth brow line.

A TINTED TAMER

Ramy Arch Angel ($35 USD, ramy.com). This goes on white—so you can see where you're putting it—and then changes to a universally flattering neutral shade as you brush it through brows.

“Why do my brows look so fake when I fill them in?”

—Margarita

The two most important things to getting real-looking eyebrows is choosing the correct makeup shade and then blending it in completely. I truly cannot over-emphasize what a difference this makes! No matter the formula—powder, pencil, pen, pomade, or gel—you want something that's two shades lighter than the color of your brows, unless they're very blonde or white; then you should go one or two shades darker. When in doubt, choose a matte taupe. It's a neutral that looks good on everyone. After you apply the product, pull a spoolie brush, which looks like a clean mascara wand, through your eyebrows in the direction of the hair growth to blend in and remove any excess makeup.
