The Style

Wet-lock locks

They say all good trends come back around, and this '90s style isn't going anywhere any time soon. And despite the way it looks, wet-styled strands aren't actually damp. It's all about texture and mastering the right technique to give you those just-stepped-out-of-the-shower vibes.

The Updo

Twisted topknot

A fancy updo usually requires serious patience or someone who's great at styling hair (shout out to Mum!). But not this time! Take your bun to the next level with this sleek, simple style, which is so functional that it's just as well suited to the nine-to-five as it is a night out!

Keen to shake up your look for spring? These four updates will fix those hairstyle cravings

Get the look

Use a serum, oil or gel that won't leave your hair dry or crispy. The aim of this look is to mimic wet locks. "Take a ton of oil or serum and work it through with your hands," explains Kim Kardashian's hairstylist Michael Silva. "No brushes, no combs – it's all finger styling. Then completely dry your hair with a diffuser and finish off with more oil."

Start by creating a high, tight pony and secure at the crown of your head. Now, twist your ponytail around the elastic once or twice, depending on the length of your hair. Pin your pony in place on the underside of your head, being sure to leave a section of hair fanning out like Bella and straightening if required. Slick back your roots and mist with hairspray to secure.
